Open Access policy, Center for Neuroplasticity and Pain (CNAP)

The Open Access policy of the Danish National Research Foundation (DNRF) applies to DNRF grant holders. With the policy, DNRF wants to establish Open Access as the standard in scientific publishing. The aim is to ensure that all scientific articles, the quality of which has been assured by peer review and which have been published in a scientific journal, can be read and distributed without any financial, technical or legal restrictions. The policy means that published scientific articles which are the result of full or part financing by DNRF must be made freely available to everybody via Open Access with the permission of the journal. For more information please visit DNRF Open Access.

CNAP must meet the goal of DNRF to publish open access. If you do not have funding for the article processing charge of golden open access, we must “parallel publish” your journal article as green open access, i.e. upload the accepted manuscript after peer review, normally after an embargo period, in the institutional repository of Aalborg University, which is VBN.

Therefore, you must save the version of your article for parallel publication that has been revised after peer review and finally accepted for publication, i.e. the “accepted manuscript” before copy-editing (also known as authors’ final version).

Please send your accepted manuscript by email to Pia Lund plund@hst.aau.dk after which Else Ramsgaard will upload it in VBN in the existing record for the publishers’ version, and with the required embargo period.

Most publishers require authors to link to the final publisher’s version and DOI and to add the label “Accepted manuscript” to the document. This is taken care of by the extra page generated by VBN.

On accepted manuscripts of articles for Elsevier journals, you must insert the following text on the first page of your accepted manuscript:

© <year>. This manuscript version is made available under the CC-BY-NC-ND 4.0 license.
